THEY'RE ENORMOUS,

they're everywhere, and most aren't going away.

More than 45,000 massive dams were constructed during the 20th century. Today, thousands more are under construction or being planned, mostly in developing nations. These projects' ostensible purposes are commendable: to provide reliable electricity, to prevent floods, and to ensure safe and stable water supplies for people and agriculture.

But these benefits are often eclipsed by the enormous social and environmental damage that large-scale dam projects can cause. And in far too many cases, political and corporate interests rule at the expense of communities and ecosystems.

For those who recreate on rivers, or whose jobs or businesses depend on them—who understand the environmental, economic and spiritual value of free-flowing streams—damming flows, drowning canyons and diverting water can seem nothing short of insane. But would we feel this way if we lacked clean drinking water, or if our homes were threatened by seasonal flooding, or if we had no way to charge our iPhones?

In the end, there are no easy answers. The issue is as gray as Grand Coulee concrete, and as monumental. The good news is, from Uganda (page 41) to China (page 24) to the American Southwest (page 57), concerned people are asking hard questions.

We believe these questions can be answered only through thoughtful and respectful conversation, and we hope these stories, and others to come, will help inspire it.

SALWEEN SPRING

An American outfitter in China and the Tao of fighting a losing battle.

“There’s a certain ironic joy in realizing that the world is changing. Everything is in a steady process of change. You can’t control that change. It’s better just to observe what’s going on and do your best to help make the world better. Taking people to the river has turned out to be the thing I can offer to the world to help it be better.”

Travis Winn has dedicated his life to fighting a battle he knows he won’t win: keeping China’s rivers flowing free. Though he can’t control the outcome, he’s learned to appreciate the process—sharing the joy of running rivers with the Chinese people.

JUMA OF ITANDA

“People in my village believe there are spirits in Itanda. These spirits stay underwater. When they wake up one day and they realize their gods are not there anymore, they want to know where those gods have gone.”

An enterprising village boy in Uganda finds work helping rafters carry their boats to the river. He eventually gets hired as a safety boater for an outfitter on the Victoria Nile, and later becomes a guide. His earnings make him one of the wealthiest people in his community and help him pay for his education. But then comes a dam, and then another. Now his livelihood is in jeopardy, along with the village, the river and the rapids he loves.

CRUSH

We wanted a shoe we could wear day in, day out, on and off the water. A shoe that the off-duty guide/safety boater/instructor/bartender sleeping on our couch would covet. It had to feel as good as it looked and perform as well as it felt—in the boat, on the SUP board, around camp or at the pub. We made the upper breathable, quick drying and tough enough to last a nonstop season. We gave it a crushable heel and tuned the interior for barefoot comfort. Then we chose the stickiest rubber we could find, siped it for even better wet traction, and stamped our Idaho soul onto the sole. [Imported]

LAKE POWELL PAST AND PRESENT

The persistent beauty and complex legacy of America's most notorious reservoir.

"I wanted to explore one of the most confounding collisions of spectacular, natural wonder and the mind-bending power of man's technological influence. I wanted to explore a place so overlooked by outdoor enthusiasts and adventurers, and despised by those who cherish wild, natural landscapes. I wanted to explore a place representing such vile and greedy human meddling, but providing a lifestyle for millions of people across the southwest that is extraordinarily complex and widely misunderstood."

American Rivers conservationist Sinjin Eberle and a team of writers and photographers paddled 87 miles through the receding waters of Lake Powell exploring its complicated legacy and the remnants of the landscape it flooded.

YAK YAK BOAT CARTS

Over the years, we've seen a lot of different boat carts, tested a lot of boat carts, sold a lot of boat carts. But we've never found a model that met all our criteria for what a good boat cart should be: lightweight, compact, easy to use and maintain, reasonably priced, and effective on a variety of surfaces. So we decided to build our own. We made it lightweight and rust resistant, and it folds compactly for easy stowing. A tried-and-true NRS loop strap secures your boat, not some funky ratchet or belt. The removable wheels are airless—no odd-size tubes to replace—with a wide footprint and smooth-rolling rubber tread. Two sizes fit nearly any canoe or kayak, and you won't need a wheelbarrow full of cash to buy one.

NRS STRAPS

During the high-water year of 1974, a wave of Idaho rafting accidents gave NRS Founder Bill Parks an idea. Rather than tie equipment down with rope or webbing, which made the gear difficult to detach after a flip, why not adapt cam straps from the freight industry? Bill sourced the best buckle on the market, along with the strongest, most UV-resistant webbing. When he brought the two together, the NRS strap was born, and the boating world has never looked back.

LOOP STRAPS

Commonly used on raft frames to strap down coolers and dry boxes. When you unbuckle the strap to get something out of the cooler, each end remains fixed to the frame, ready to be tightened again.

5,000 MILES OF WILD

5,000 miles. 5,000 stories. One unified voice for our nation's rivers.

Few pieces of legislation have done as much for U.S. rivers as the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, which has helped protect over 12,000 free-flowing miles since its passage in 1968. With the 50th anniversary of this vital law approaching, we're teaming with American Rivers to start celebrating now. We've set a goal to secure Wild and Scenic protection for 5,000 new river miles, but we can't do it without your help.

Our rivers need your stories.

This spring we're embarking on a mission to show how rivers connect us, and how we're connected to rivers, through storytelling. By collecting 5,000 personal stories about the meaning of rivers in our lives, we'll send one loud and clear message to our leaders: our rivers are worth saving.
